College of Mass Communications

Academic Unit to be Reviewed	Type of Accreditation	Accrediting Agency Conducting Review	Review Timeline	Next Review Date	Institutional Rep. in Charge	Chain of Command	Status of Review
College of Mass Communications	National	Accrediting Council on Education in Journalism and Mass Communications	Each accredited program is reviewed every six years. The college will seek reaccreditation in 2009-2010.	Accreditation not sought	Dean Jerry C. Hudson	Dean Jerry C. Hudson	N/A

The College of Mass Communications was last accredited by the Accrediting Council of Education in Journalism and Mass Communications (ACEJMC) in 2003. The accrediting team found no substantive problems in the college's performance based on ACEJMC accrediting standards. However, the college administration and faculty articulated its concern with the visiting team about an ACEJMC standard limiting the number of hours students might complete in mass communications courses to 40 hours. While the college agrees with the standard that students complete 65 hours in liberal arts courses, the changes in the industry regarding convergence and social media have created new career opportunities for students beyond the traditional career paths we taught 20 years ago. Therefore, squeezing new courses and expanding the curriculum within the 40 hour limit created difficult challenges. Dean Jerry C. Hudson and several other administrators at leading mass communication programs have supported a modification to the 40 hour limit. At the present time, there have been no changes to this standard.

The college was scheduled to be reviewed for re-accreditation in 2009. The college faculty and the college's National Professional Advisory Board recommended unanimously that the college would not seek re-accreditation in 2009. The ACEJMC accreditation is a self-imposed accreditation with no penalties for non-accreditation. Because several programs are now reviewing the values of accreditation, the ACEJMC Council is re-evaluating the standard that limits the number of mass communication hours programs may require in its respective degree program. Several major programs have chosen to not seek accreditation. Some of those programs are University of Wisconsin, The Ohio State, Washington State, University of Michigan, University of Utah, New Mexico State, Oregon State, and the University Houston. Only journalism is accredited at the University of Texas. Advertising, Public Relations, Broadcasting and Photography are not accredited at UT. At some point in the future, the college may consider ACEJMC accreditation. At the present time, the college is not accredited by ACEJMC.
